

ABSTRACT

This invention relates to stands for flower arrangement and for storage of bouquets. This invention is particularly directed towards an assembly stand for flower arrangement having multiple stations for maintaining bouquet holders stable during design and assembly of flower arrangements. The stand can also be used for storage and transport of the bouquets. The stand contains a frame and a top surface having openings thereon attached to the frame.